California State Historical Landmarks in the South Bay:

- No. 711 Montgomery Memorial - At Otay Mesa, in 1883, John Joseph Montgomery made the first flight in a heavier-than-air craft 20 years before the Montgomery made many more glider flights before accepting a professorship at Santa Clara College, where he continued his interest in aviation. Local Montgomery-Walker Park, NE corner of Coronado Ave and Beyer Blvd, South San Diego
- No. 1023 National City Depot Transcontinental Railroad - This National City California Southern Railroad depot built in 1882 served as the first Pacific terminus station of the Santa Fe Railway system's transcontinental railroad. The station was the West Coast general office and figured prominently in the effort to break the economic and transportation monopoly of California held by the Central/Southern Pacific Railroads. The first transcontinental train arrived in November 1885, resulting in one of the largest land booms in the history of California. Of the original five transcontinental railroad terminus stations, this unique Italianate designed station is the lone survivor. Location: 900 West 23 St, National City, San Diego
